Officials look into CTA operator's condition at time of O'Hare derailment

Chicago Tribune

A team of federal safety experts investigating the CTA Blue Line train crash has focused on the operator's physical condition and whether she was fatigued when the train struck a barrier and went airborne, an official said Tuesday.

Questions have been raised about whether the operator was sufficiently rested when her shift began around 8 p.m. Sunday, and about her level of awareness more than six hours later when the train plowed into the station and landed atop an escalator at O'Hare.

"We always take into consideration the fatigue factor," said Ted Turpin, the lead investigator for the National Transportation Safety Board. "That's one of the areas we investigate." The effect of fatigue on train operators has been a well-documented factor in train accidents. The Federal Railroad Administration has estimated that "human factors" contribute to nearly 40 percent of train crashes and that fatigue played a role in roughly a quarter of them.

The Dec. 1, 2013, Metro-North commuter railroad derailment in New York City in which four people were killed has drawn nationwide attention and its own federal investigation. The lawyer and union representing the engineer have reportedly said he admitted to "nodding off."

In Monday's crash, the train operator, a one-year CTA employee, was "extremely tired," and there were indications she might have dozed off at the controls, according to the transit workers union president.

The NTSB provided no comment on a scheduled Tuesday-afternoon interview between the operator and investigators. The CTA has not identified her, nor would the agency answer questions about her shift or hours

Union President Robert Kelly has said the operator "works a lot of overtime," but had been off for about 17 hours before starting her overnight shift.

Meanwhile, other investigators at O'Hare focused on additional areas Tuesday, including the condition and maintenance of the tracks; the train cars and their mechanical condition; signals and switches; and other CTA personnel, Turpin said.

The investigators determined that the train's emergency braking system was engaged, but the train apparently wasn't speeding as it approached the station, Turpin said. As the train approached the O'Hare station at about 2:50 a.m., it was traveling about 25 or 26 mph on the middle of three tracks, he said.

LAWSUITS FILED

Two lawsuits were filed Tuesday against the CTA following Monday's Blue Line train derailment. Airport newsstand employee Niakesha Thomas, 23, and Dalila Jefferson, a 23-year-old airport security worker, filed suit claiming negligence on the part of the CTA. Both lawsuits seek a minimum of $50,000 in damages.

A safety device on the tracks triggered the train's emergency braking system, but it wasn't clear yet why the train did not stop in time, Turpin said.

"Whether it stopped in time or not, that's an analysis we have to figure out," he said.

It isn't clear when train service to the airport will resume. Officials said they would continue shuttling passengers via buses from the O'Hare station to Rosemont.

Kim Kardashian isn't the problem

@ernestwilkins

Friday afternoon is supposed to be the holiest time of the workweek, the express ramp to another wonderful weekend of not having to wear pants. Unfortunately, last week was spoiled by the Internet's ridiculous response to the new Vogue cover featuring Kim Kardashian and Kanye West.

The cover, a mock wedding photo taken by Annie Leibovitz, sparked outrage from Beverly Hills to Berlin, from bloggers to Buffy herself. (Sarah Michelle Gellar tweeted that she was going to cancel her subscription to the magazine. So now you know what she's been up to!) Shockingly, almost none of the hate is pointed toward West, which usually is the case. This time, all the hate is pointed toward Kardashian, and it's absolutely ridiculous.

You know what angers me about it, other than a bunch of people lying about still subscribing to magazines like they don't just read them at the barbershop and then steal them if they want to finish an article like I do? People don't have an actual reason to hate Kim Kardashian. Seriously. You don't have a reason.

People are outraged because they believe Kardashian, a woman who built an empire upon the sex tape with which she entered our collective consciousness, isn't good enough to be on the cover of a magazine that once featured the Spice Girls, While we're complaining, we completely ignore the fact that the complaining itself is fueling more of the very thing we're complaining about. If I lost you on that sentence, I mean that bitching about Kim Kardashian means you're only going to end up getting more Kim Kardashian.

You'll hear people say, "Oh, she's trashy." OK, compared to whom? She got famous because she was in a circle that already had media attention (remember when Kardashian was "just" a pal of Paris and Nicky Hilton?) and she took advantage of that. Look, I know tons of people (of both sexes) who came from money and found success in life by doing absolutely nothing other than living off the largesse of their lifestyle. By the same token, I know people who do real porn and don't have much cash to show for it.

Why are we angry about Kim in particular? Is it because we haven't found a way to profit from doing seemingly nothing? Why are we spending so much time hating the player when we instead should be hating the game?

Maybe the frustration of being sold a raw deal when it comes to growing up in America makes you want to take that frustration out on an easy target. Maybe people are just older versions of the jerks they used to be in high school. I don't know, but I do know that unless Kim Kardashian came to your house on Thanksgiving and backhanded your Aunt Bey, you have no reason to hate her. Go do something productive.

One more thing: The tragic suicide of designer L'Wren Scott came with the revelation that her personal finances and > bombshell was compounded by the assumption that she was one of the glamorous ones, the No. 1 girl of Mick Jagger and a top-tier fashionista to boot. It's a sobering reminder that business were in disarray. This we can't ever know for sure what others are going through, and maybe some empathy would be a good look.

Stars: They're just like us. That's truer than we might like it to be. ERNEST WILKINS IS CHICAGO'S WINGMAN, GETTY IMAGES

Proposed state legislation could be more restrictive than a proposed city ordinance for rideshare companies. PHILVELASQUEZ/TRIBUNC FILE

Rideshare rage

Lawmakers eye statewide measures as city debate continues

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

Lawmakers in Springfield on Tuesday introduced state regulations targeting rideshare companies such as Uber, Lyft and Sidecar that in some ways would be more restrictive than what Mayor Emanuel proposed for Chicago's rideshare industry.

The house bill, sponsored by Rep. Mike Zalewski (D-Riverside), would limit drivers from operating more than 10 hours in a 24-hour period and would prohibit companies from charging any fare that is more than the highest per-mile rate charged by cabs.

The proposed state legislation would require $500,000 combined commercial liability insurance, a chauffeur's license for drivers and an annual commercial ridesharing dispatcher's license for rideshare companies.

In addition, rideshare vehicles would need to pass safety inspections, be clearly marked and be no more than four years old. Drivers would not be able to pick up or drop off passengers at airports or convention centers, and they would be subject to the same requirements as taxi companies in providing service to under-served areas. No fewer than 5 percent of the vehicles working with the rideshare company would be required to be wheelchair accessible.

The regulations Emanuel proposed last month would not restrict operating hours but would limit flat fares or rates based on time or distance. Companies also would be prohibited from offering services at O'Hare, Midway and McCormick Place under the city's proposal. Drivers would have to pass a drug test, training program and background check to drive vehicles that pass a 21-point checklist. The ordinance would impose a license and insurance requirements of St million in commercial general liability and commercial auto liability coverage.

The Institute for Justice on Tuesday filed a motion in federal court to intervene in a lawsuit filed by cab companies and medallion owners against the city. The suit filed last month claimed the city has failed to enforce the existing taxicab ordinance, allowing rideshare companies to operate. The Institute is representing rideshare drivers on the basis they would lose business if the lawsuit succeeds.

Rideshare companies opposed the state's proposal. Lyft called it a backdoor attempt to "undermine all the work that's already been done to reach a solution on this issue." The company said the proposal would "ultimately kill peer-to-peer transportation."

A hearing is scheduled for the state proposal on Wednesday. In Chicago, a City Council committee has a meeting set for Thursday to discuss Emanuel's proposal.

Aldermen: Ban the plastic bag

Chicago Tribune

Seven years after a plastic bag ban was first proposed for Chicago stores, aldermen said Tuesday it's time to end the debate.

"Our environment has waited too long" for a ban on the bags that litter streets, clog sewer drains and end up in landfills, said Ald. Proco "Joe" Moreno (1st), leader of the ban effort. "Our neighborhoods have waited too long to get this garbage out."

But after more than two hours of talk at a Health and Environmental Protection Committee hearing, aldermen put off a vote until April 15. And Mayor Emanuel has yet to weigh in on the latest proposal.

"We are supportive of the goals of this ordinance for a clean and healthy Chicago and are working closely with" Moreno and committee Chairman George Cardenas (12th), said Sarah Hamilton, the mayor's spokeswoman.

Ald. Ed Burke (14th) first proposed banning retail stores from using plastic bags in May 2007. But Burke's proposal fizzled, and the council instead voted in 2008 to require stores to provide plastic bag recycling bins.

Mudslide death toll expected to rise

The likely death toll from a devastating weekend landslide in Washington state rose to 24 on Tuesday after rescue workers (above) recovered two bodies and believed they had located eight more, the local fire chief said. Officials said that 176 remained missing, but they were hoping that number would decline.

West, Russia signal line drawn in Ukraine crisis

Russia and the West drew a tentative line under the Ukraine crisis Tuesday after President Obama and his allies agreed to hold off on more damaging economic sanctions unless Moscow goes beyond the seizure of Crimea.

Supreme Court debates birth control mandate

The U.S. Supreme Court signaled Tuesday it may allow corporations to mount religious objections to government action, possibly paving the way for companies to avoid covering employees' birth control as required under Obamacare.

Hundreds on trial for murder in Egypt

The leader of Egypt's outlawed Muslim Brotherhood and 682 others went on trial Tuesday on charges including murder, a day after more than 500 supporters of deposed Islamist president Mohammed Morsi were sentenced to death.

Relatives react with anger

6 BELJING Dozens of distraught relatives of passengers on a lost Malaysian jetliner clashed with police in Beijing on Tuesday, accusing Malaysia of "delays and deception" a day after it confirmed the plane crashed in remote seas off Australia.

About 20 to 30 protesters threw water bottles at the Malaysian embassy and tried to storm the building, demanding to meet the ambassador, witnesses said. Earlier, the relatives, many with tear-stained faces, had linked arms and chanted "Malaysian government has cheated us" and "Malaysia, return our relatives" as they marched peacefully and held banners.

The relatives' grief and anger was unleashed Monday night after Malaysian Prime Minister Najib Razak announced that Malaysia Airlines Flight MH370, which vanished more than two weeks ago while flying to Beijing from Kuala Lumpur, had crashed in the southern Indian Ocean.

Citing satellite-data analysis by British company Inmarsat, he said there was now no doubt that the Boeing jet came down in the ocean in one of the most remote places on Earth-an implicit admission that all 239 people on board had died.

Bad weather in the region far off Australia's western coast Tuesday forced the suspension of the search for any wreckage, just as a series of satellite images and other sightings of floating objects had raised hopes that debris from the plane would be found.

Malaysia's confused initial response to the Boeing 777's disappearance and a perception of poor communications has enraged many relatives of the more than 150 Chinese passengers and has strained ties between Beijing and Kuala Lumpur.

Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister Xie Hangsbeng demanded that Malaysia hand over all relevant satellite analysis showing how Malaysia had reached its conclusion.

The U.S. State Department said the U.S. was cooperating with Malaysia and working to verify the data from Inmarsat and the Kuala Lumpur government about the course of the U.S.-made plane.

The heralded rookie makes his NHL debut-and he's not bad

Repeat after us: Teuvo Teravainen is not a savior. Now that we've got that out of the way, we'll focus on the Blackhawks and the NHL debut of the 19-year-old Finnish phenom, who hit the ice against Dallas on Tuesday.

Will he be the next Patrick Kane? It's SO easy to make that leap. Kane first played in the NHL at age 19, both are 5-foot-11 and both are known for stickhandling skills. It's too soon to know if the rookie has, say, a Conn Smythe Trophy in his future. But it's not too soon to see if he sparked the Hawks on Tuesday.

Kris Versteeg, Duncan Keith, Marian Hossa and Andrew Shaw provided the scoring in the 4-2 win.

FIRST PERIOD

Teuvo time! On his first shift, he wins the faceoff against Dallas' Dustin Jeffrey. Plenty more where that came from. Soon after, he creates a scoring chance by poking the puck to a streaking Ben Smith. Then late in the period, he finds himself on the ice for Andrew Shaw's powerplay goal. Which means Coach Q has faith in the kid.

Tone it down: His first attempt at a hit in the NHL is, um, less than effective. He bounces off a Stars player like rain off a windshield. That's what happens when you're only 165 pounds and playing against the big boys.

Blackhawks 1, Stars O

SECOND PERIOD

Plaved: 4:15

Teuvo time! The kid rips a slap shot from near the blue line, but it's deflected out of play. We'll never know if that was destined to be Teravainen's first NHL goal. *sniff*

Tone it down: Well, that's embarrassing. He trips over his own feet when he would have had a two-onone break. Chalk it up to stage fright.

Blackhawks 3. Stars 1

Teravainen (front) battles Shawn Horcoff during the third period on Tuesday. us presswire

THIRD PERIOD

Played: 3:36

Teuvo time! He nearly scores on a waist-high tip from way downtown. There are those great hands everyone's raving about. And when Niklas Hjalmarsson's stick broke, Teravainen handed his to the defenseman.

Tone it down: Welp, fans will have to wait to see Teravainen's first goal, assist, even shot on goal. The Hawks don't play again until Thursday. So. Unfair.

Mmmmm, bacon on a stick ...

BACON-ON-A-STICK

"Thick cut, premium Danish bacon seasoned with black pepper." White Sox fans who need to eat their feelings are about to have more options. The team announced Tuesday its new menu offerings throughout the park, and "bacon-on-a-stick" is a highlight. Other items that caught our eye:

Adobe mango chicken sausage

"All-natural chicken sausage mixed with mango and adobe chilies."

Bacon mac and cheeseburger

"A ground beef blend steakburger with bacon mac and cheese."

Chicken and waffle sandwich

"Crispy cornflake breaded chicken served between two house-made waffles and brushed with honey butter and maple syrup."

Banana split sundae helmet

"A 3-pound banana split with four scoops of vanilla, chocolate and strawberry ice cream topped with caramel and strawberry sauces and chocolate syrup, whipped cream and cherries."

OK, SO THIS ISN'T WHAT IT WILL LOOK LIKE, BUT BOY DOES IT SOUND TASTY

Now it's a slam don't

All the hoops wannabes in the NFL need a new touchdown celebration. The league confirmed Tuesday that all dunks over the goal post will draw a 15-yard penalty. But the Lambeau Leap is still acceptable. Sigh. Great.

So much for 'retirement'

Michael Phelps is one step closer to pulling a Brett Favre. His longtime coach, Bob Bowman, said Tuesday that the swimming star probably will get into a meet "sometime soon." Phelps had said after the 2012 Olympics that his competitive days were over. Bowman said Phelps, 28, has been practicing "four to five times a week."

MUSIC LOLLA LOFT-

Breaking down the fest's freshly announced acts

By Matt Pals | REDEYE

All aboard the Stankonia Express.

Outkast tops the just-announced schedule for Lollapalooza 2014 (Aug. 1-3 in Grant Park), which should inspire a city-wide whoop of approval. The reunited duo of Big Boi and Andre 3000 - insert their many other monikers here-is a legit, exciting headliner, which can't be said for previously reported reruns like Eminem (2011), Skrillex (2011) and Kings of Leon (2009). Arctic Monkeys are a fantastic band, but their spot on the top line is evidence of Lolla's inability to book massive acts, rather than towering fame for the British rockers. The Monkeys' previous Lolla appearances (2009) and 2011) have been awesome and packed, though, so it's not as if their set will be sparsely attended.

Regardless, this is a step up from 2013's big names, which included Nine Inch Nails and then a steep decline into The Postal Service, Phoenix, The Cure, The Killers, Mumford and Sons and, bleechhhh, the Lumineers. And each day of Lolla 2014 provides reason for anticipation. With three-day passes already sold out and one-day passes ($100) on sale 10 a.m. Wednesday, here's a breakdown of the massive fest's three days of music.

Where he's from: Brooklyn Assertion you can use to sound informed: "How many other acts today can say they graduated from Yale? NONE, THAT'S HOW MANY."

Standout song: "Sonsick" What to expect: A strangely operatic piece of indie rock. Recommended for fans of Dirty Projectors.

Cash Cash

Where they're from: N.J. Assertion vou can use to sound informed: "Did you know they produced Krewella's "Live for the Night"? Standout song:

"Take Me Home"

What to expect: The kind of music you hear when you shop at Forever 21. This may or may not appeal to you.

Bombay Bicycle Club Where they're from: London

Assertion you can use to sound informed: "Video game fan? You may have heard these guys in 'MLB 13: The Show'!"

Standout song: "Shuffle" What to expect: Up-tempo tunes that perfectly merge the best of synth-pop and indie rock. You will probably dance.

Saturday

Rocky Business

Where they're from: Brooklyn Assertion you can use to sound informed: "That song they did with Azealia Banks should be a hit." Standout song: "Kim Kardashian" What to expect: These guys combine rap, punk and world music sounds to create something truly different.

Vance Joy

Where he's from: Australia Assertion you can use to sound informed: "His music may be mellow, but don't forget that this guy played professional football in Australia." Standout song: "Riptide" What to expect: Fun, sunny pop that's the most irresistible kind of earworm.

Ratking

Where they're from: New York Assertion you can use to sound informed: "This is how Odd Future would sound if every member could actually rap." Standout song: "100"

What to expect: Ratking's nasal word pile-up makes them sound like four little Eminems. This set is going to be amazing or terrible.

Sunday

Jhene Aiko

Where she's from: L.A. Assertion you can use to sound informed: " totally caught her back in the day when she used to open up for B2K." Standout song: "Bed

What to expect: A wonderful voice crooning sweetly over rap tracks.

Bronze Radio Return

Where they're from: Conn. Assertion you can use to sound informed: "This is that song from that commercial!" ("Shake Shake Shake" has been on commercials and TV shows since 2011.)

Standout song:

"Shake Shake Shake"

What to expect: Fun rock that dips a toe in folk and roots music. BRR is a perfect pre-game for the Avett Brothers and Kings of Leon.

Bear Hands

Where they're from: Brooklyn Assertion you can use to sound informed: "Their lead singer was classmates with the guys from MGMT and used to play with them."

Standout song: "Giants" What to expect: Do you like MGMT but wish they would rap more? Bear Hands is for you. ERWILKINS@TRIBUNE.COM

"Second Son" stars a surly young troublemaker named Delsin Rowe who is suddenly saddled with the ability to toss fireballs and become a wisp of smoke after an encounter with an escaped supercriminal. In a plot borrowed very heavily from Marvel's "X-Men," Delsin must confront a government agency who treats individuals exhibiting powers as "bioterrorists." The PlayStation 4-powered visuals of a panicgripped Seattle are spectacular and playing with your newfound abilities can be fun. but "Second Son's" narrative and characters are lacking. It's admirable that Sony chose a Native American lead character, but Delsin relies on too many groan-worthy one-liners and forced "attitude" to be interesting

The idea of playing as a solitary astronaut struggling to survive in the cold reaches of space is appealing, but "Out There" isn't as much a space exploration game as a tedious resource management game, It's like a mobile video game version of the movie "Gravity" if George Clooney and Sandra Bullock spent most of their time peering at a periodic table. trying to figure out if they have enough iron or silver to repair the hull of their ship. Metal Gear Solid V: Ground Zeroes

PlayStation 3 & 4, Xbox One, Xbox 360

Gravelly-voiced tough-guy actor Keifer Sutherland recently took over the reins as iconic mercenary Snake (also known as Big Boss), and that's just one of the ways the new "Metal Gear" has raised the stakes. Konami trimmed the super-long cutscenes and pretentious philosophical patter from previous titles and keeps the emphasis on Snake's thrilling mission to infiltrate a secret military base in Cuba and rescue political prisoners. You're granted bonuses for taking the sneaky route and tiptoeing your way around enemy troops, but you also can hijack a tank and bust in with guns blazing. The only downside to "Ground Zeroes" is the length. It's meant as a cliffhanger-style prologue to "The Phantom Pain," out later this year, meaning there's only a few hours worth of gameplay.

Upright Citizens Brigade returns home for the Chicago Improv Festival

By Julia Borcherts | FOR REDEYE

Sometimes, size does matter. In the case of the 17th annual Chicago Improv Festival, this translates to more than 200 acts at 21 venues in 11 categories including long-form, shortform, experimental, musical and—wait for it—puppetry. That makes it the longest-running and largest improv comedy festival in the world. If that's not enough for you, there are workshops, lectures and classes, too.

But the festival doesn't sacrifice quality for quantity. In addition to top groups from Chicago and around the world—from New York to Los Angeles and from New Zealand to Brazil—national comedians including "Saturday Night Live" alums Tim Meadows, Paul Brittain and Horatio Sanz, Maribeth Monroe (Comedy Central's "Workaholics"), Dan Bakkedahl (HBO's "Veep," FX's "Legit") take the stage for multiple shows.

Headlining the fest is the Upright Citizens Brigade, formed in Chicago by Matt Walsh, Ian Roberts, Matt Besser and Amy Poehler in 1991 before moving to New York and landing a Comedy Central show (1998-2000) and moving on to other film and TV projects. The group has theaters in New York and L.A. and recently produced a new how-to book, "The Upright Citizens Brigade Comedy Improvisation Manual."

Joining Walsh, Roberts and Besser for their "Asssscat" show are Meadows, Sanz and L.A. comedian Betsy Sodaro, plus legendary musician-producer Steve Albini.

We called Chicago native Walsh—who also plays press secretary Mike McClintock on HBO's "Veep" and is the co-founder of the popular "Bear Down" podcast—to find out more.

About "Asssscat": It's our oldest improv [form]—it's, like, 20 years old—and it's long-form improv comedy with a great cast. Horatio [Sanz] will be there and lan Roberts, Matt Besser and myself, [and some others] will be playing with us. Our monologist is a guy named Steve Albini. He's got great dark stories and a funny point of view of the world, so he'll be throwing monologues out for suggestion and then we will improvise using the information from Steve's monologues.

How the early '90s Chicago comedy scene fueled the creation of Upright Citizens Brigade: Everybody came to Chicago because of Second City. It was such a breeding ground and respected place, the ruling model for ensemble comedy. But then when they got there, many people felt like what [The Second City was] doing wasn't necessarily what they wanted to be doing. So there was a lot of alternative experimentation—in many ways, a lot of the interesting stuff was in reaction to the constraints of Second City. A lot of us beginning to perform were trying to create something that we felt was more relevant or different.

Why his parents were nervous about his career choice: They would have preferred a career with a trajectory—if you get a CPA, you know you can get an accounting job—'cause you're very poor for a very long time doing comedy or performance for a living. So whenever I visited the suburbs, Mom would always send me home with tubs of peanut butter and sheets of lasagna or whatever canned goods she had in the pantry. They never liked the comedy I was doing—it was probably too ribald. But they were always like, "If it makes you happy ..." And certainly, my father always liked that I was doing it. I think he was a bit of a closet thespian himself.

One common misconception about improv comedy: One of the platitudes that get thrown around improv a lot is, "It's all about 'yes, and ..." What we discovered writing the book is that it's actually more accurately described as, "If that's true, then what else is true?" So it's not denying "yes, and ..." it's just defining it in a clearer way. So your job as an improviser is to receive and accept realities that your partner is giving and then add things—if this was happening, then what else might be happening or what else might be true? That's the big change in focus, we think, for what students learning improv should be looking for.

Achieve this by moving into the "game" of the scene: The game is basically the comic engine that continues to get laughswhat the audience enjoys about a certain scene and its dynamics. The classic one is "Liar, Liar." It's a movie chicagoimprovfestival.org where Jim Carrey was a liar as part of Chicago Improv Festival app for his job and he was successful because Ticket price per show: $5-$50 he could lie so well. And then he was cursed with he could only tell the truth. So the "game" of that movie is, "What if a guy could only tell the truth?" And then just move him to different locations, show him with different people. You raise the stakes by exposing him to situations where his boss is there or his wife or somebody he doesn't like. You're basically playing that same game in different scenarios.

Why Chicago is good for comedy:

Chicago is a great, very theater-friendly town. It's not expensive to put up shows and there's tons of talent and there's definitely an audience, so if you can get a stage, you can get something going. New York's cost-prohibitive and in L.A. there's no audience, really. People would rather stay home. In terms of the audience, it encourages experimentation, whether for music or comedy, because it's not totally polluted with the agents who come by or the industry [executives] who pluck people out of shows. People are just doing shows to make

How he drew on his Chicago background for his "Veep" character: I grew up in Chicago,

beginning.

so I based it on Chicago networking. In my imagination, that's where that guy learned the trade-a guy who grew up in politics, where it was all And now, he's a bit of a dinosaur because anymore, you know? You can't just ask the New York Times in the front row to go first-you don't control the story as much anymore.

What's next for the "Bear Down" podcast:

We'll probably drop a new episode on drafting. We're very lazy and disorganized because we're all busy. So the output is not consistent, but it's always Improv Festival good when we do make an Dates: Monday through episode.

> Being "busy" includes the completion of a comedic improv film, "A Better You," in which he acts. directs and co-wrote:

I've always been curious Number of stages: 20 about mental illnesses and the categories they fall into and the treatments that you could get. In L.A., I think people are more willing to try alternative therapy for traditional problems. They might see a massage therapist or hypnotist or something. So it's about alternative therapy and it's also about L.A. There's a certain unique desperation that L.A. has.

> Since improv is unscripted, how do you "cowrite" an improv film?

I spent about a year and a half with my friend Brian Huskey-who plays the main character-writing an outline of about 50 scenes. Each scene has about three paragraphs of description beneath. And it has a story arc and intersecting moment and characters and expectations of what you want out of each scene and the emotional trajectory of the characters. Once you have the cast, you do as much rehearsing as you have time for to get people on the same page of tone and backstory. You don't improvise things from the movievou save that for shooting days. And then on the shooting days, you talk through it once, then you rehearse it a couple times and then you start filming it.

> He's crowdfunding post-production and there are some crazy prizes: Someone will get an outgoing message from one of our actors like Rob Huebel or Nick Kroll or Horatio Sanz. Another one of my favorites is I can get a famous person to deface my headshot with graffiti and then I'll send you that. And I'm teaching a bunch of workshops and improv classes for anybody who's interested in improv. JULIA BORCHERTS IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Pop at Dusek's 1227 W. 18th St. 312-526-3851 Let's be clear. These aren't sodas.

They're pops.

But they're nothing like the bubbly sugar bombs we've grown accustomed to at our neighborhood hot dog stands and burger joints.

Added last month to Dusek's already adventurous menu, the multiflavored pop is labor-intensive and delectable, made with as much care as any entree that comes out of Dusek's kitchen: Charred grapefruit. Malted walnut. Blackberry tonic.

All are made with fresh ingredients and carbonated to order.

"High-quality nonalcoholic beverages were in the back of everyone's mind," said Will Duncan, Dusek's beverage director and a partner in the Pilsen restaurant that opened last fall. "But we have a commitment to craft and we want everything we offer to be of a quality that excites us."

The results, a collaboration between Duncan and sous chef Robert Hager, are as dazzling as pop gets in this town. They cost $6; if made boozy, it's $6 plus the cost of the shot.

Consider the charred grapefruit: Hager peels ripe grapefruit, then chars the fruit on a skillet, leading to a faint smokiness. He combines the reduced fruit with melted sugar and water. It remains in syrup form until ordered, when a bartender carbonates the liquid in a plastic bottle.

Though advertised simply as pop, they also make fantastic cocktail mixers. The charred grapefruit and the blackberry tonic mix well with Letherbee gin. They're bright, refreshing and delicious.

Dusek's consciously does not push the pop as boozy foundations, but Duncan respects the impulse.

"We made a conscious effort not to add pressure for people to have to add alcohol," he said. "That said, a shot of bourbon in the malted walnut is delicious. So is a shot of gin in the blackberry."

In a tradition-laden town like this, perhaps most important is that Dusek's got the verbiage right. The restaurant could have called the drinks sodas, but it had the good sense not to.

"Rather than call them 'hand-crafted soft drinks,' we made it casual, fun and irreverent," Duncan said. "It was unanimous: Let's be real Midwest about this and call it craft pop."

Quick and dirty sex advice: Spring edition

It's spring, which means it's time again for another round of quick and dirty advice! Now let's shed one of our outer layers and get hot and bothered and informed!

What does it mean if he asks you out and you're going in a group with his friends?

It means that he'd like to hang out with you and with his friends, i.e. in a low-pressure atmosphere, so you can get to know each other without having to worry about datey things like who will open doors for whom and who will pay for all the strippers.

My boyfriend knits. In public, I am embarrassed about this, Should I say something?

Yes, you should say, "Thank you for this amazing knitted beanie made with love, kindness and Wool-Ease. I'm so glad you have a hobby that interests you and that you're comfortable enough with your masculinity to engage in something typically considered 'girly.' Let's tear conventional gender roles a new one, honey! You are my very own version of Salt-N-Pepa's 'Whatta Man.'

How many sex partners is too many?

Four. Any more than that and it's just bragging!

There's no right answer to this question, but I tend to err on the side of vagueness if anyone's asking. Not because of shame, but because it just sounds less creepy to say "around 40" instead of "47, 53 if we're counting blow jobs," which implies you've got some kind of sex spreadsheet that you update after every bone.

Is it weird to have sexual fantasies about your platonic friends?

Of course not. I wouldn't post about it on your LiveJournal blog or anything, but it's totally normal. Most people are attracted to their friends. Why would you hang around them if they weren't awesome in ways that might also be sexy?

I'm bored with my usual repertoire of sex positions. Can you help me out?

Help you out like make you a list, or help you out like hold your girlfriend's ankles while she tries to land the dismount?

I know that books at Urban Outfitters claim there are like 8,000 sexual positions, but really the body can only do so much without compromising the laws of physics! If you're really looking for a challenge, however, try the reverse-cowgirl scissoring scene from "Blue Is the Warmest Color." It's on Netflix instant streaming, so no excuses!

Unhappy travels

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

@mattpais

The romantic drama "Le Week-End" is uncomfortably perched between light entertainment and scarring drama. For Brits Nick (Jim Broadbent) and Meg (Lindsay Duncan), though, so is life. "This was your idea," she tells him after the spouses' effort to return to their honeymoon location gets off to a bumpy start. "How terrible to be in Paris," he responds.

The rest of the film from director Roger Michell ("Notting Hill," "Morning Glory") finds the pair alternating between brief moments of love rejuvenated and longer periods of resentment that threaten to consume them. "People don't change," Nick assures his wife. "They do," she says. "They can get worse." Many will compare "Le Week-End" to "Before Midnight" and see Nick and Meg as a future version of Jesse (Ethan Hawke) and Celine (Julie Delpy). It's true that both chatty couples are somewhat unhappy and looking for signs of life, unsure whether it's under their nose or miles and miles away.

An important difference is Broadbent, whose presentation of dignity on the verge of destruction cuts harder than Hawke's chat-terbox frustration. (I love "Before Sunrise" and "Before Sunset" and liked "Before Midnight," but Hawke rarely surprises anymore.) Unfortunately "Le Week-End" also addresses its characters' states of mind in very direct terms, with dialogue (Nick says both "I'm not sure enjoyment's really my thing" and "Love is the only interesting thing") more transparent than the layered people it comes from.

On the other hand, many of their interactions are beautiful, priceless encapsulations of the peculiarities that make up a personality. These two seemingly can't live with or without each other, and when Nick, unhappily attending a gathering at an old friend's (Jeff Goldblum), tells his wife, "I love you, Meg. Take that seriously," you can feel a marriage that's been on the rocks for a long time reaching a crossroad. Nick and Meg are one of many on-screen couples confronting different sexual needs (Nick calls Meg's genitalia "a closed book") and increasingly varied perceptions of happiness in the long term. If a movie flirts with brave insight and settles for sweet comfort, that's still plenty nice.

Wait, WHAT?! On the one hand, we really, really want this to happen. On the other hand, the Backstreet Boys. The U.K.'s Sun is spreading a wild rumor that the Spice Girls and the Backstreet Boys will unite for a joint world tour sans Victoria "Posh Spice" Beckham. A few thoughts:

- » Posh can't sing anyway, and obviously was super bored at the London Olympics.
- » Can we get 'NSync instead?
- » Does Ginger Spice still have that Union Jack dress?
- » Aren't the Backstreet Boys supposed to be marooned at sea on some cruise ship?

HOT DATE

That's when M.I.A. will hit the Riviera Theatre, with musical guest A$AP Ferg, she announced Tuesday. Tickets go on sale at 10 a.m. Friday.

'New Girl': The movie?

OK, "Let's Be Cops" isn't QUITE the big-screen version of the Fox TV show. But it does feature Nick (Jake Johnson) and Coach (Damon Wayans Jr.) as two losers, so it's halfway there. In the red band trailer, which dropped Tuesday, Johnson and Wayans Jr. dress up as cops for Halloween, then decide to carry the masquerade into real life. It actually looks awesome, and comes out Aug. 13.

Johnny Weir's divorce from husband Victor Voronov is becoming weirder by the minute, eonline.com reports. According to court documents filed by Voronov, Weir removed the following items from their home with the intent to sell them: Crocodile Celine bag, 40 Balencia bags, 20 furs (including a $125,000 sable), Cartier Calibre rose gold watch, green Hermes shoulder Birkin, orange Hermes 35cm Birkin and 12 Chanel bags. Also taken by Weir was their dog, Tema, which Voronov calims was a "make-up" gift after Weir was caught sexting with another man. Where is their reality show, we ask you.

It is bigger and better than the other three [films] combined. This will be the biggest movie of 2014."

-Mark Wahlberg, on "Transformers: Age of Extinction," at the annual CinemaCon convention in Las Vegas. Wahlberg also happens to star in this, the fourth "Transformers" film from director Michael Bay, out June 27. Which clearly is a coincidence.

Nobody said it was easy

Sad GOOP! Gwyneth Paltrow and Chris Martin announced Tuesday that they are "consciously uncoupling," aka divorcing. The actress and the Coldplay frontman have two children together, and have been married since 2003. They added in a statement on Paltrow's GOOP site that they will continue to co-parent.

Couples retreat

Actually, this sounds exactly like that 2009 movie-but with a reallife couple. Deadline.com reports that Chris Pratt and Anna Faris will star in "Vacation Friends." about a rowdy couple who bond with a straightlaced duo while in Mexico. This is only worth seeing to find out if their real-life parental chemistry holds up on-screen.
